Passage 2

When my twin sons, Chad and Brad, were born, I was worried about everything. Five years later, our little girl, Becky, ____1____ our family. I wanted everybody to be ____2____ and happy. I worked hard to see that they were.

As the kids grew older, I worried about headaches, throat infections and many other ____3____ childhood illnesses. I didn't like it when the boys spent time "warming the bench (板凳)" during Little League football games. I worried about Becky when she ____4____ the ball while playing baseball. Before long, the children were in their teens. I stayed ____5____ late the night waiting for the boys to return home. Many times the ____6____ that I would call the police crossed my mind if they weren't home on time. Luckily, they always arrived home safe and sound before I had to do that.

The day the boys moved away to college was a sad day indeed. I worried about their being able to take care of themselves. A few months after the boys left college, our ____7____ rang in the middle of the night. It startled (惊醒) us when we looked at the clock. It was 3 o'clock in the morning. "Something must be wrong," I shouted to my husband, Roy, as we both ____8____. We ran to the door, opened it, and there ____9____ a police officer.

"You need to ____10____ your sons," he seriously announced. I picked up the telephone, but unfortunately, it was ____11____. A line outside had been accidentally cut. Roy and I jumped into the car and ____12____ to the nearest telephone. My stomach ached. My husband was ____13____ so badly that he could hardly dial the number.

On the first 14, Chad answered the telephone. “What’s wrong?” Roy shouted into the receiver.

“We were worried about you,” Chad told him. “We’ve been trying to call you all night, but you didn’t answer.

We called the police and asked them to go and 15 you.”

For the first time in their lives, the boys were worried about us. And they were the ones who actually had to call the police.
