Passage 1

Practical Skills Taught by Grandmas

At a school in Southern California, teens and their grandmas came together to join a program called Learn with Grandmas every Friday. The grandmas taught the children practical skills like cooking. This program not only helped fight loneliness in seniors, but also gave kids knowledge they can't always get in school. More than just learning skills, the organizers built a friendly bridge between different ages, showing that everyone has something valuable to share.

Classrooms Moved to the Beach

What if classes were held by the seaside? It may sound like a dream, but a school in Spain has turned it into reality by moving its classrooms to the beach! With the purpose of allowing students to breathe in fresh outdoor air and enjoy nature, the school started the activities. To everyone's joy, nearly all of the students have fallen in love with these beachside lessons, finding them both interesting and inspiring.

Huazhong Normal University No. 1 High School held its yearly “Sunshine Charity Sale” this December. At the sale, students’ creative products, like DIY paper lamps showing campus landmarks (校园地标), were popular. This year marks the 15th year of the “Sunshine Charity Sale”. It has drawn over 20,000 students. It won the Hubei Youth League Excellent Project in 2018 and has raised over 1 million yuan in the past few years. All money will help poor students at the school and its partner schools.

Passage 2

Breaking Screens Won’t Break Screen Habits

In Chongqing, a mother broke the TV because her kid didn't listen to her and kept watching it while eating. The news shows how many kids today can't stop using phones, tablets, or watching TV too much. The mother's action shows her anger, but it also teaches the child a bad lesson. Parents should guide kids wisely instead of using force (暴力) because real education (教育) comes from understanding, not from being afraid.

An 80-Year-Old's Fight for Care

An 80-year-old Chinese woman took her two sons and a daughter to court (法庭) because they didn't take care of her. Though she raised them with great love, her children now pay no attention to her. In China, looking after parents is both a law and a good tradition. But today, some people care more about themselves than their family. This thing shows how family traditions are becoming less important.

In 2024, Wang, a full-time housewife, was injured (受伤) in a traffic accident caused by Xu. Although Wang didn't have a job outside, she was taking care of her family. She asked for lost-work pay, but Xu said no, saying she wasn't really working. However, the court in Wuhu thought differently. It believed that Wang's housework saved money for the family. So, the court said yes to her lost-work pay.

Passage 3

Sell Vegetables, Share Care

The students from Dianbu Central School in Feidong County, Anhui, organized a charity sale at their school gate. They sold fresh, organic vegetables grown by themselves in their school garden, attracting many buyers. The vegetables were sold out quickly. The event raised funds (基金) for building a labor education base and aiding elderly care homes. "This teaches students social responsibility," said a teacher.

ig Soil, Grow Wisdom

Xipingluo Central School in Henan's mountain area has turned an 18-acre (亩) plant garden into an outdoor classroom. Over 150 types of herbs are grown here. Students work with the tools in the garden. "The project combines (结合) farming education, letting kids learn traditional planting skills when caring for plants," said the headteacher. The school hopes this hands-on experience will deepen students' connection to local farming culture. What a unique way to mix schoolwork and nature!

Shaoji School in Dao County (道县), Hunan, recently held a lively fishing event at its “Fish Garden” practice base. Teachers and students worked together to catch and carry fish, turning labor into fun. The activity aimed to teach students life skills through hands-on experience. A student said, “It’s exciting to learn while working!” The school believes such events help students grow practical abilities and teamwork. Who knew fishing could be both educational and joyful.
