My tennis coach Jim taught me very differently.

I played my first competition when I was eight. I was so excited and wanted to win. But Jim made me ___36___. He found an older girl with greater skills to clean me off the court (球场). He thought there was little to be learned from a(an) ___37___ win.

I remember ___38___ against a 14-year-old girl when I was 11. Jim went to her mother and told her ___39___ to beat me, “play to her low forehand (正手).” He knew I would pay more attention to my weaknesses if they ___40___ losses (失利).

One time I won a national match and got a tall golden trophy (奖杯). Jim held the trophy up and ___41___ it into the bin (垃圾桶). “That’s what that trophy will mean to you down the road,” he then smiled and took it out again, but taught me a ___42___. And at a good time, too.

When I was 13, Jim planned my practice against grown men. We played matches at the tennis center all the time. One night I ___43___ myself winning against everyone, no matter how much older. And I was expecting a high five or even ___44___ from Jim, but he just shook his head. “You can’t play like that,” he said. “You can’t walk or talk like you’re ___45___.”

But such important messages take time to ___46___. I was playing a match against a boy who I knew I could beat. We were tied (平局) and I was ___47___ about this. I threw my racket down hard to the floor — and then I heard Jim shout, “___48___!”

He walked onto the court and pulled me out. “Why are you so angry?”

“I should be beating this kid.” I cried.

“You never ___49___ beat anyone! You can’t just walk on the court thinking you’re going to clean the floor. You have to be a better person than that!”

Now I began winning more ___50___ and often, and Jim kept holding me back from focusing on rankings (排名) and points. I could always learn from tennis or Jim’s practice, whether I won or lost.

36. A. win B. escape C. lose D. pass

Penguin (企鹅) hero wins prize

Two college students have won an international prize because they did outstanding work for animals. Their achievements include starting the Global Penguin Society, an organization set up to protect penguins and their habitats (栖息地). They are awarded nearly £200,000, and they say it will be used in their work. “This is a dream,” they told Focus magazine.

Turtles’ returning to the wild

On January 12, two green turtles (海龟) and four loggerhead turtles were sent back into the wild after being found caught in fishing nets. Three of the turtles had 10 types of plastic in their stomachs. An environmental protection organization looked after the turtles, removed the plastic and safely returned the animals back into the sea.

Last month, the Beijing Raptor Rescue Center¹ got a call about an injured Chinese sparrowhawk (雀鹰) in Miyun. Because of the bad weather, the staff couldn't pick it up right away. Luckily, villagers took good care of it. After arriving at the center, the sparrowhawk passed the health check and was soon set free.

"Since the center started, more people have learned about the hard times raptors face." CGTN reported.

Can you imagine a whole year away from home, from work and school? Maria and Brian traveled 52,000 miles and visited 18 countries with their four children Leo, 12, Mia, 10, Colin, 7 and Luke.⁵

Over the year, the family created many once-in-a-lifetime memories. They rode camels in Mongolia, kayaked (划皮艇) in Cambodia, and flew in a hot-air balloon in Turkey. The memories really matter because unless science makes a breakthrough soon, their children will become blind. They had been diagnosed (诊断) with retinitis pigmentosa (RP), a genetic (基因) disease that would gradually take away their eyesight. The moment the parents learned the news, one said, "Everything we hope for our children has to change." So the idea of a yearlong trip was born, one that would show the kids the world — while the kids could still see it.

In the early 2022, Maria and Brian left their jobs, rented out (出租) their home for the next year, packed everything they might need for a year on the go and set out with their children. Because the kids would miss more than nine months of school, the plan was that they would study French and math a few times a week. The rest of the time, they'd be learning from the world around them.

Each day during the trip, Maria and Brian watched their kids change. They grew taller and became more confident and outgoing. The family grew closer. When Leo asked his mother what it meant to be blind, Maria said, "It's like when you have your eyes closed. Being blind doesn't mean the end of the world. Nothing would prevent you from doing most things, including skiing, swimming or even becoming scientists who work on cures (治疗) for RP." With his eyes shining, Leo nodded and said...

56. Why did the family take a yearlong trip?

- A. The parents wanted to set up a new travel record.
- B. The children were interested in exciting activities.
- C. The parents needed to do science research.
- D. The children might become blind.

57. Which word can best describe Maria and Brian?

- A. Hopeful. B. Outgoing. C. Humorous. D. Strict.

58. To prepare for the trip, what did the parents do?

- A. They studied French. B. They gave up their jobs.
- C. They sold their house. D. They bought a hot-air balloon.

59. What would Leo say to his mother in the end?

- A. "I'm going to make the most of my life." B. "My world will be different from others'."
- C. "I'm sure our family will get closer." D. "My eyes will never be cured."

60. What might be the best title for the passage?

- A. Make a Living B. See the World
C. Plan a Journey D. Overcome the Fear

C

The idea “humans are made from stardust (star-made material)” was first brought to public in the 1980s by the astronomer (天文学家) Carl Sagan. It might seem mysterious. But Carl explained the science behind it.

Long time ago the Big Bang (大爆炸) created hydrogen¹ and helium². These lighter elements (元素) were turned into heavier ones like carbon³ and oxygen⁴ through nuclear fusion (核聚变) caused by some stars. Such stars that helped produce new elements were called “element factories”. When the stars died, those elements were spread across space. Over time, they went together and formed new stars, planets, and ... humans!

Carl said we humans could be a walking museum. The carbon in our cells, the oxygen we breathe, the iron⁵ in our blood, and even the calcium in our bones were once part of a star billions of years ago. Our left hand might have atoms (原子) from a red star while our right hand could have the atoms from a blue one! Oxygen atoms in the water we are drinking might be older than the Earth. How about the pizza we are eating? The carbon in it could be “stardust” 4.5 billion years ago. Every atom in us is like a tiny time capsule (胶囊) with an unbelievable space story. _____.

The fact is that everything around us — the trees in our schoolyard, the animals on our farm, even our smartphones — is made of “stardust”. So next time when we look at the night sky, we should remember: The star Sirius (天狼星) might have donated some of our oxygen. The Orion Nebula (猎户座) could be the “birthplace” of your calcium. That shining light might be our atomic cousin! And we’re not just on Earth—we are in space! That is what’s called family ties.

Notes: 1-6均为化学元素，对应元素符号为：H, He, C, O, Fe, Ca。

61. Stars were called “element factories” because _____.

- A. they created H and He B. they helped produce new elements
C. they turned into C and O D. they caused Big Bang

62. Why does the writer mention “pizza” in paragraph 3?

- A. To explain why we eat space food. B. To tell a story that happened long time ago.
C. To describe how much carbon is in the pizza. D. To show that even food has “stardust” in it.

63. Which of the following can be put in _____?

- A. We need to learn about medicine. B. Humans know the Earth a lot.
C. We’re carrying the space’s history. D. Space has changed greatly.

64. What does the underlined phrase “atomic cousin” suggest?

- A. Stars offer humans light. B. Humans are protected by stars.
C. Stars are connected with humans. D. Humans have discovered most stars.

65. Which would be the best theme (主题) picture of the passage?

- A. B. C. D.
